Intro

Nonoka is a Taiwanese artist who joined Twitter in December 2020, with a NSFW account consisting of mostly female furry artwork and occasional fursuit posting. She has a following of around 32k on her main account, and is currently profiting from taking commissions, Twitter blue engagement revenue, and Patreon. Since 2023, she has gained most of her popularity within the span of a year by posting artwork frequently. However, the lack of consistency with the quality of her art has raised suspicion within the community. She is now locked her account due to people caught her using AI.

Upon being suspicious, we did an investigation based on her work and social media postings, and here by compiled a document to record and commentary of what we discovered, with analysis of her work. In order to raise awareness of Nonoka who is using generational AI to steal from artists and is scamming her followers and commissioners. This document's purpose is to warn the community of her thieving and fraudulent behaviours.

All the screenshot and pictures listed in the document can be found in the folder, aside from reading this document we also suggest you check them out.

Part 1: The Concrete Evidence

During our investigation, we discovered multiple art that she posted throughout 2023-current with different degrees of AI involvement, from blatant AI posting to painting over AI backgrounds. It is likely the evidence we listed below does not include all of them.

Nonoka's most recent commission pricelist

Starting the report with the infamous AI cat portrait that she is using as one of her current commission examples—the piece that started the suspicion on the legitimacy of Nonoka's art.

In late August of 2023, Nonoka posted a WIP (work-in-progress shot) of a painted anthro cat portrait (now deleted), and was called out on Facebook with someone accusing her of painting over AI generated art.

Here are some areas that raise suspicion:

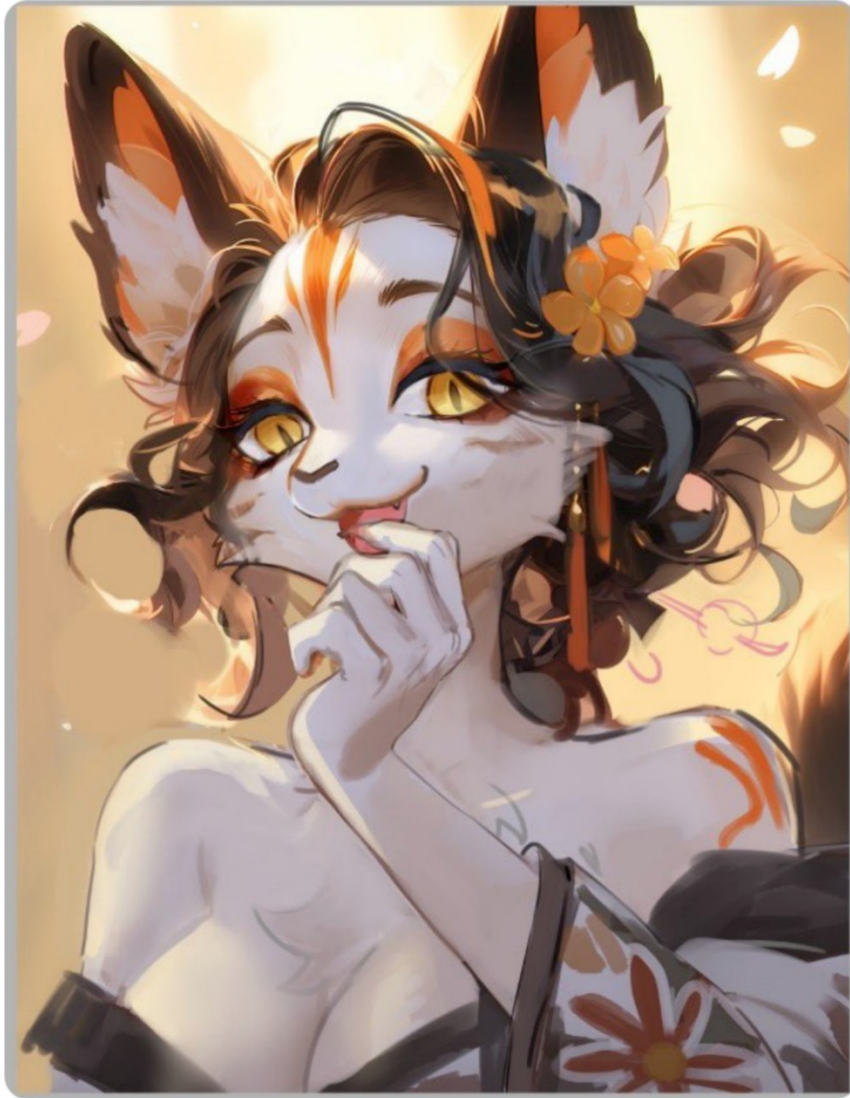

- The hair seems illogical, abstract, and fragmented.
- Face tufts on the right seemingly blends into the hair.
- AI generate the fleshy part of the ear as fur.

The cover-up WIP and finished "painting"

Areas that are still very suspicious

Upon being called out, she deleted both posts on Facebook and Twitter, then quickly posted another WIP and the finished piece after a day, attempting to cover up any part of the process passing for AI. After covering them up, the hair is still done very poorly and could pass as AI, proving that her skill isn't able to catch up with the AI generated result, hence the final draft still shows obvious signs of AI.

A locked account on Twitter commented on the painted cat portrait, likely calling out Nonoka for using AI while not giving credit, and this is her reply regarding the accusation:

Nonoka's response on twitter

On September 3rd, with people being suspicious of her in the Facebook community, she posted a longer explanation there addressing the controversy of her using AI and a past controversy between her and a kemono artist, confirming that she did use AI as a reference in her creation process, but denied painting over AI or tracing it directly. She also mentioned that she will notify any AI use on commissions, which is a blatant lie according to the evidence listed below.

Her explanation translates into:

“1. To answer recent controversies of some people questioning whether my work are AI paint overs, I would clarify that these are not the facts and there are no photo bashing and or tracing, however I have been using AI to assist and reference during the creation of my recent personal work,

I will be sharing how I use AI assistance with shading in the creation process below.

If you think this method of reference is unacceptable, the commissioner can cancel the commission. I will be declaring the use of this method for any future commission. If you have any question or concerns, you are welcome to discuss it directly here.”

This, however, isn't the first instance of her plagiarism and scamming using AI. We suspect her using AI in her art could be traced all the way back in May, with a pornographic fanart of Renamon that features genitalia with obvious anatomy error and was much polished than the rest of the character, we attached the screenshot in the folder provided, due to the nature of the art, viewer discretion is advised.

On June 5, Nonoka posted an fanart of anthro wolf Link, although the piece is presented similarly with her other work in her portfolio at that time, we speculate it is traced over of AI generated image, and here's why:

Part 2: Analysis of Legitimacy

* Disclaimer: Speculations. ****

In this part of the document, we will be providing our insights and speculations regarding this situation, based on our investigation and analysis of objective factors in her work, behaviour, and remarks. While also raising questions regarding Nonoka's legitimacy of skill. Please be notice that these are majorly speculative, and may not reflect what happened, unless stated otherwise with provided evidence.

During our investigation, we came up with several questions and they can be mostly summarized as below:

- Most of the AI art listed above is her personal art, so did Nonoka ever use AI in her paid commission work? Does all of Nonoka's work have AI involvement?
- Is Nonoka capable of creating art matching the skill she presented in her portfolio without AI?
- Can you elaborate on the scamming part? Do you have any proof of how many she profited from said scam?

Before we begin analysing, here are the conclusions we came up with:

Yes, Nonoka did use AI in her commission work, while we do not have proof that all of her works are AI generated, we do have proof of her using AI as references and speculate that she used AI in different degrees for her work.

No, Nonoka is not capable of creating art matching the skill required for her current portfolio.

Yes, we can elaborate. By profiting from commission while being dishonest about her skill, she is scamming people. While we do not have the exact proof for the actual amount, she profited from said scam, we do have a very rough estimate that she acquired $5000 + from commissions. She herself claimed she has almost 50 in her queue, while all her commissions are paid in full upfront. $5000 is a rather conservative estimate of how much she scammed.

Now we get the answers out of the way, let's dive into the analysis part.

We wanted to explain why Nonoka's behaviour is scamming to begin with. According to Cambridge dictionary, scam as a noun means "a dishonest plan for making money or getting an advantage, especially one that involves tricking people", as a verb means "to trick someone into giving you money or giving you some advantage, in a dishonest and often illegal way."

Although this is not an accusation of criminal wrongdoing, she is practicing scamming behaviour by being dishonest about her skill, claiming AI assisted art as her own creation to advertise and is profiting from said fraudulent behaviour.

So how skilled is Nonoka actually? Although art is rather subjective, since Nonoka isn't an abstractionist artist, there are some standards that could be applied in this situation. To summarize Nonoka's portfolio, it is inconsistent in quality, while showcase a wide variety of style and technique, some of her piece also displays foundational mistake such as broken anatomy or incorrect shading.

Normally, these mistakes are uncharacteristic according to her portfolio, but its Nonoka we're talking, and we all know she cheated with AI. We will be covering some of the doubts we have regarding her skills, mainly as list below:

- The ability or lack of thereof to identify, locate, and fix AI mistake.
- Inconsistency with anatomy foundations.
- Ability or lack of thereof to paint backgrounds.

To gives a rough idea of how fast and drastic Nonoka's skill "improved" within a short amount of time, we attached an annual summary of Nonoka's art in 2023 that she posted on December 14, 2023.

And we have concrete evidence of her tracing over AI with the Wolf Link in June. Here's a brief timeline that we compiled based on her own art posts and the evidence in part one:

- 2023
 - o April, Nonoka started introducing AI into her creation process in the form of referencing.
 - o June, she started painting over AI generated image.
 - o July, posting more blatant AI art.
 - o September, the cat portrait raising much suspicion on Facebook.
 - o October 2023 to February 2024, her portfolio being relatively consistent compared to other period, with occasional AI background in some of her commissions.
- 2024
 - o February and March, she is near the 30k follower miles stone, she started mass posting including some blatant AI art.
 - o April, her posting another batch of blatant AI while reaching 32k followers.

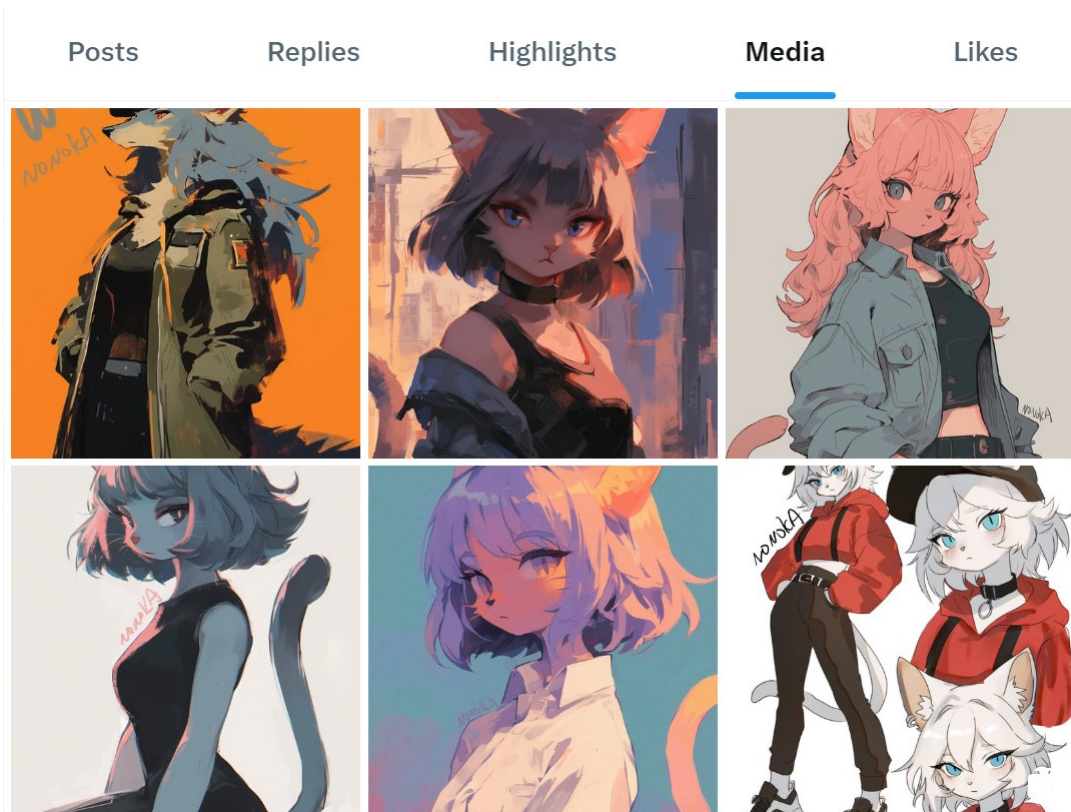

While her earliest AI assisted art could be traced back to April 2023 and she starting to paint over AI in June. We speculate that she still attempts to put in the effort on painting over AI for consistency and avoid raising suspicion. Upon gaining success tricking people into following her and buying commissions, she became more blatant and lazier plagiarizing with AI, thus the art she posted in July having multiple AI errors.

After the cat picture raising enough suspicion, Nonoka became quite cautious with her AI use between September to February 2024, going low profile as the art she posted resumed a relatively consistent state, where she occasionally sneaks in AI backgrounds.

However, after she successfully creates an illusion that she can create art without AI assistance and the suspicion died down, she started to post another batch of blatant AI art trying to reach 30k miles stone. And has been posting AI art at the end of April 2024 to reach 32k miles stone.

Nonoka also have the posting habit of posting art of the same subject and similar style in batch, we speculate that is because she generates a batch of AI images in one go, than painting over them and adding her own signature to keep the algorithm on her side.

With her deleting those AI art posts and locking her account upon people questioning and calling her out (the cat portrait WIP and tiger on April 28, 2024), she absolutely knew what she's doing, and how being discovered using AI would jeopardize her career as an artist. It is not that she is unwilling to put in the effort to erase evidence, it is that Nonoka herself lacks the skill to identify and locate AI errors, not to mention her failed attempt for covering up even if she discovered them, leaving enough loopholes for spectator to be suspicious of.

Now onto the foundations that she is very inconsistent in, we will do a brief analysis on a few of her allegedly non-AI artwork. Brief for the sake of not having to write 20 more page and spear both us and the reader from having to look at Nonoka's work for more hours.

Above is a recent commission piece from Nonoka, it is posted on March 22, 2024, which we think is a good piece to showcase how Nonoka's art will look like without AI. Just to point out a few anatomies error with this censored version:

Female character:

- Feet sizes are different, one large one small.
- Length of thigh are different, one much longer than the other one.
- Missing rest of the arms

Male character:

- Abysmal hands
- The visible lower arm is too short and thin.

One might argue that maybe this is just one bad or off handed piece from Nonoka, which honestly doesn't look good either as it is a commission piece that a client paid for expecting the quality she advertised in her commission listing. Or might argue that we purposely choose one of her worst works, to that we would like to address mistakes like this is very uncharacteristic if she really has the skill her portfolio displays.

Now this one doesn't look as bad as the previous example, still there are some rather obvious mistakes that could either be interpreted as just overall carelessness, weak anatomy foundation, AI paint over, or all the above. To name a few mistakes:

- Wing anatomy not matching as a pair.
- Continuation error with the tail.

Again, look at the arms, especially the left arm, it is very unlikely to make mistakes like this if Nonoka truly have the skill that her overall portfolio presents.

Another doubt we have is Nonoka capable of drawing backgrounds without AI assistance? Our answer is no. From our investigation throughout Nonoka's portfolio, her work is majorly character centric, being characters in a monochromatic background or no background at all. The few piece that includes background are either, relatively simple backgrounds such as bedding, spamming foliage brush, heavily blurred AI generated background.

Again, to spare ourselves and the reader from reading 20 more page about Nonoka's work, we'll just do a shout out to her fitness collection that she posted on January 2024.

Not only does this series all features heavily blurred backgrounds that we speculate being AI generated, it also fits the speculation of she making AI art in a batch featuring similar subject matter and theme, then painting over and post them, creating a sense of a series of art done by herself.

Based on the analysis above, we drew the conclusion that Nonoka is not capable of creating art matching the skill required for her current portfolio. Thus, making her profit from art, whether her commissions, adoptable, YCH, twitter blue revenue or Patreon, a scam.

In the beginning of this part of the document, we have given the conclusion to a very conservative and rough estimation that she has scammed $5000+, and are going to elaborate on how we came up with said conclusion. Before we dive into it, we wanted to repeat that this is a speculation based on the information we have regarding this situation, it might not reflect the fact.

Although we don't have access to a public queue to acquire the exact number of commissions Nonoka has taken, we do however have a very rough estimate based on her own words from a public post she made on Facebook. April 15th, Nonoka claiming she has 40+ to almost 50 unfinished commissions in her current queue in a conversation with her partner Mileswolf. The conversation translates into:

Mileswolf: You still have a dozen of commissions left?

Nonoka: No, 40 some to almost 50.

我： 沒， 40幾快50張吧

Based on the context of the conversation, the number she mentioned doesn't include finished commission, which means it is very likely she has taken more than 50 commissions during the period of her creating art with AI involvement. For the sake of this estimation, we will just go as she has taken 50 commissions.

Prices vary due to complexity.

According to her current commission form, all her commissions are paid in full and upfront within 72 hours upon confirmation, which implies that she has already taken the payment for all the commissions in her queue.

While we do not have any exact statistic for the type of commissions that her client orders, again, for the sake of estimating we will assume that all her orders are single icon that are 100$ each, the cheapest options that she offers. By doing a quick multiply of 50 clients/order and 100$, we have a very rough and conservative estimate that she collected $5000 from commissions.

Based the completed commissions and YCHs she posted, it's obvious that there are clients who ordered the pricier options. It is very likely that the amount that Nonoka scams is much more than $5000 which isn't a small number to start with. It is much worse than what it looks like.

Part 3: Record of miscellaneous questionable behavior

Aside from stealing and scamming people with AI, Nonoka also displays some pretty questionable and toxic behaviour. Several incidents stand out, which we decided to include in this document.

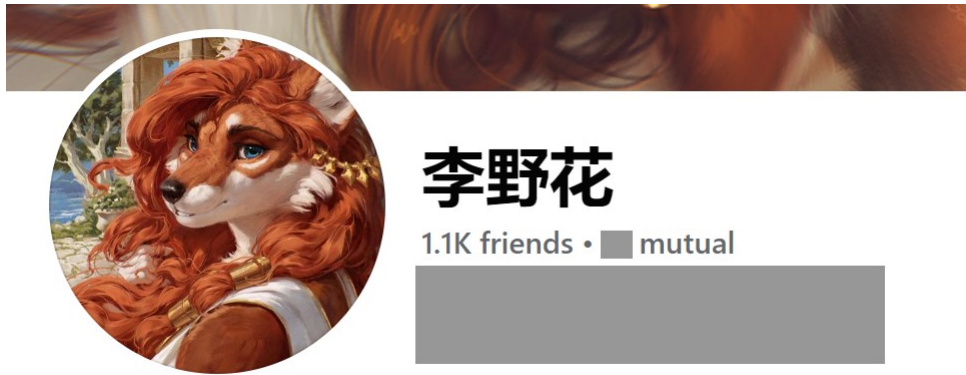

1. Massive queue, nasty attitude,

On April 12th, Nonoka made a tweet that passive aggressively complained that some of her commissioners was unwilling to wait for two weeks for their commission, while also stating some of her clients have been waiting for a year to get their commissions.

Aside from her already scamming commissioners with AI, it doesn't look good on her when she has client who waited for a year to begin with, on top that she have a massive que of 40+ to almost 50 at this moment, and is still accepting commissions.

2. Talking down mutual artist on her Facebook, claiming said doesn't deserve the support they are getting.

Before people jump to the conclusion of us nit picking and leaking from Nonoka's private posts, we would like to state that Nonoka have about 1.1k friends on Facebook, even she posted the remarks below that only her friends can see, it is still broadcasts to an audience of 1.1k.

On February 18, Nonoka posted a series of vent complaining about how a mutual of hers @/tinygarpirate have "mediocre to low skill" and doesn't deserve the traction and fame.

Her remark translates into:

"Myst of Twitter, a thread:

About this artist who just joined Twitter in 2020 and already have 70k followers, 2000 subscribers on Patreon. Regarding his skill, I can only say that its mediocre to low. (Linking the artist profile and art) While still manage to get a lot of likes and comment with skills like that."

It is rather ironic considering Nonoka joined Twitter in December 2020, and she only managed to get 32k followers by plagiarism and stealing, the sheer audacity of her saying something so vile.

Conclusion

Before we conclude this report, we wanted to say this document has been long time in the making, we are beyond thankful to everyone for reading this, spreading the word, and offering support.

The furry fandom is a very art positive fandom, and we hate to see people like Nonoka taking advantage of it and abuses people's trust and support, also stealing from fellow artist, and taking their well-deserved spotlight. Hopefully this document and the archives could be the nail on the coffin of her scamming career.

In the end, we sincerely apologize for not releasing this information sooner to the public and warn the community regarding this scam to prevent people falling into it.

Our reason being is we think to effectively call out a scammer like Nonoka, it would be best to have a detailed report, good amount of evidence regarding the situation, and enough suspicion raised so she doesn't get away like she did before. Again, we are very sorry to those that fall into her scam, as it could be totally avoided if we have finished compiling this document sooner in time.
